If you are struggling with alcohol or drug abuse the first step is to reach out and talk to someone you trust. This might be a family member, friend, counsellor or your GP. You can also call Directline on 1800 888 236 which provides 24 hour counselling, referral and information specific to alcohol and drug use.

Struggling with substance abuse and want help?

Addiction is a treatable disease. You do not have to hit rock bottom before you get help.

Substance abuse can negatively affect every aspect of your life. The good news is there are organisations and professionals dedicated to making sure individuals get the help they need. The decision to get help can be challenging but organisations and professionals understand that each person will approach substance recovery in their own way and at their own pace. Talk to someone today to start the process of change.

What is addiction?

There are several ways to characterise addiction. Below is a description of the physiological basis for addiction and the impact it can have.

Definition by: Psychology Today

<https://www.psychologytoday.com/basics/addiction>

Addiction is a condition that results when a person ingests a substance (e.g., alcohol, cocaine, nicotine) or engages in an activity (e.g., gambling, sex, shopping) that can be pleasurable but the continued use/act of which becomes compulsive and interferes with ordinary life responsibilities, such as work, relationships, or health. Users may not be aware that their behaviour is out of control and causing problems for themselves and others.

Is someone you love struggling with substance abuse?

If someone you love is struggling with substance abuse it can often put great strain on your relationship. It is important to remember that substance abuse can be the cause of their behaviours rather than the personality of the individual. The person themselves may not be ready to seek help, however there are organisations that can help support and guide you in your relationship with someone affected by substance abuse.

It is important that people can be addicted to both legal and illegal substances. Even if you or someone you care about is using illegal substances there is support available.

If the person is being violent or abusive to you, others or themselves seek help immediately by calling 000.
